1. 56 Henry, New York (Booth 157)

This stalwart of the New York art scene known for launching the careers of some of the hottest young artists in the market pulls a strong showing with the mixed media works of Ohad Meromi. His large-scale insulation-foam monument for Adam and Eve is a showstopper.

2. NOME, Berlin (Booth 320)

Berlin-based NOME's booth devoted to the work of Voluspa Jarpa bears a certain glamorous austerity. The slickness of the artist's hand belies the heaviness of the works' source material, primarily declassified documents from the CIA and historical records of human zoos.

3. Verve, São Paulo (Booth 431)

Verve returns to the fair this year with another strong showing, this time focusing on the haunting sculptures of Nádía Taquary. Seemingly both object and body at once, they hold the space of the booth with an almost spiritual intensity.

4. Mickey, Chicago (Booth 430)

Chicago mainstay Mickey brought a characteristically curious mix to a booth showcasing the gently unnerving paintings of Ryan Nault (whose work borrows from the visual language of digital displays) along with the brash but intimate sculptures of Amy Stober.

5. Abattoir, Cleveland (Booth 221)

Showing with Cleveland gallery Abattoir is painter Katie Butler, whose arguably heavy-handed political content might be easy to dismiss if not for her distinctively Midwestern and decidedly strange tendencies in addressing the picture plane. The longer you look, the deeper they go.

Expo Chicago is on view at Navy Pier Festival Hall, 600 East Grand, through April 14.

Expo Chicago 2024—Printer's Row: A Review of Editions + Books

A part of Expo since 2014, "Editions + Books" has always struck me as kind of unhip. But this year, along with new ownership, Expo is trying something a little different: the exhibitors are clustered together and form a neighborhood tucked into the northwestern corner of Expo's urban sprawl.
